They escorted the fisherman inside, where he found his wife sitting on a high throne studded with diamonds. She wore a long silk dress and a golden crown. In her hand she held a scepter studded with rubies. On one side of her stood barons, dukes, and duchesses. On the other side stood a line of ladies-in-waiting, each one shorter than the one before.

“So,” said the fisherman, “now you are queen.”

“Indeed,” said his wife haughtily.¹⁸

“Well, then,” said the fisherman. “I suppose there is nothing more to wish for.”¹⁹

But that very evening, as the sun went down and the moon began to rise in the sky, the fisherman's wife sent for her husband.²⁰

“Husband!” she bellowed, “it displeases²¹ me that the sun and moon will not rise and set at my command. Go to the fish and tell him I must have the power to make the sun and the moon rise and set whenever I choose. See that it is done immediately!”

The fisherman walked back to the sea.²² He felt sick all over, and his knees knocked together nervously. At the seaside, thunder roared and lightning flashed. Huge dark waves crashed on the shore.²³ The fisherman had to shout:

“Hear me, please, oh magic fish.

My wife has sent me with a wish.”

The fish swam up and asked, “What does she want?”

The fisherman replied, “My wife wants the power to make the sun and the moon rise and set whenever she chooses.”²⁴

The fish only said, “Go home.” And so he did.²⁵ There, he found his wife sitting in the old, run-down hut. And there they live to this very day.

Puss in Boots

Once upon a time, there was a farmer who had three sons, a donkey, and a cat. The sons worked in the field, the donkey carried wheat and Puss, the cat, chased mice. After the farmer died, one son got the farm. One son got the donkey. The youngest son got Puss. "I am poor," said the youngest son sadly.

"I'm poor, too," said the cat. "Get me a pair of boots," Puss said. "I'll make you rich."

The youngest son gave Puss a fine pair of small boots just like his own boots. Puss put on the boots and walked down the road on two legs. When Puss reached the forest, he hunted for fine birds and then took them to the king. The king was so pleased that he gave Puss a big bag of gold. The cat took the gold to the youngest son.

Then they led him to his looking glass.

“How handsome you look, your majesty!” said one of the swindlers. All of the courtiers nodded their heads in agreement.

The emperor marched out of the dressing room and made his way out of the palace, followed by many advisors and servants. He marched down the main street of town, with soldiers and bodyguards surrounding him on all sides.²⁰

The streets were lined with great crowds. Everyone had heard about the emperor’s new clothes, made of magic fabric that only the wise could see.

“How lovely the emperor’s new clothes are!” one man said.

“And how well they fit him!” added a woman.

None of them would admit that they could not see a thing.²¹

Independent Annotation Work

The emperor marched through the street bursting with pride, showing off his brilliant new suit to everyone in the land. Much to his surprise, they all seemed to see what he could not—and so he was not going to be the one to tell them! Just then, a young child stepped out of the crowd and cried out, “He hasn’t got anything on!”²²

A hush fell over the crowd. For a few seconds, nobody said anything. Then everyone began to whisper, “The child is right. The emperor isn’t wearing a thing!” Then people began to giggle and laugh as they cried out, “He hasn’t got anything on!”

At last the emperor knew he had been tricked. He tried to march back to the palace as proudly as ever.²³ But he was blushing from head to toe, as everyone could plainly see.

“Oh, Beast,” Beauty sobbed, “How you frightened me! Thank goodness you are still alive. I never knew how much I loved you until now, when I feared it was too late.”²⁷

In a faint voice Beast said, “Beauty, I was dying because I thought you had forgotten your promise. But you have come back. Can you really love such a dreadful creature as I am?”

“Yes!” said Beauty. “I do love you!”

Then once again the beast asked, “Beauty, will you marry me?”²⁸

“Yes,” she answered. “Yes, Beast, I will marry you!”

Before she finished speaking, a flash of light beamed around her.

Beauty gasped and covered her eyes to shield them from the bright light. When she opened her eyes again, she no longer saw the beast. But there, lying at her feet, was a handsome prince.

Babe and Paul helped the lumberjacks solve all sorts of problems. Once there was a river that was full of twists and turns. Sometimes the trees would get stuck in the turns and never make it downstream to the sawmill. But Paul Bunyan thought of a way to fix that! He went to one end of the river and sent Babe to the other end. Paul grabbed the river and pulled in one direction. Babe pulled the other end in the opposite direction. Then—snap! Just like that, all of the kinks were pulled out, and the river was as straight as an ax handle.²¹

Of course, this tightening operation left the river a good deal longer than it had been before, and there was a lot of extra water lying around. Paul and Babe worked together to dig five big holes to hold all the extra water. Nowadays these are called the Great Lakes.²²

One day, the logging bosses got to talking. One of them said that the United States was a fine country, to be sure, but it could still stand a little improvement. For one thing, it could use a few more rivers. And what it really needed was a big river running right down the middle of the country, all the way from Minnesota down to New Orleans. “If we had a river like that,” the man said, “we could ship timber down to New Orleans and all around the world!”²³

Paul Bunyan happened to overhear this conversation. He told the bosses he would see what he could do. He hitched up Babe and they started plowing south. On the right side they made the Rocky Mountains, and on the left side they made the Appalachian Mountains.²⁴ Paul Bunyan and Babe didn't stop until they had plowed a channel all the way south to the Gulf of Mexico. And the river that flows in that channel nowadays, that's what we call the Mississippi River.²⁵

From that day on, Paul and Babe went around the country, using their size and strength to help anyone who needed it. Later, they dug the Grand Canyon as they made their way to the West Coast of California.²⁶ And when the wind blows just right from the west, you can still smell those infamous, colossal pancakes cooking on the frontier.²⁷

Shelly Shark and Stella Starfish are best friends. They both live in the ocean. Shelly and Stella are both girls and they love to play together. They are best friends!

Shelly Shark is a very fast swimmer. She could swim around the ocean all day long and not get tired. Stella Starfish is not a very fast swimmer. She does not like to swim because it makes her very tired. Stella likes to lay in the sun and relax!

Stella Starfish has five arms. This makes it easy for her to climb on the rocks. Shelly Shark does not have arms, she has fins. She cannot climb like Stella can. Shelly Shark has fins. These fins help her to swim. Shelly Shark also has a lot of teeth. Shelly can use her teeth to eat a lot of food. The Emperor's New Clothes excerpt

The prime minister went back to the emperor and told him that the cloth was quite lovely, and as soft as could be. He said he was confident that the emperor would like it.

That was what the emperor had hoped to hear. The next day, he went to have a look for himself. After all, if his prime minister had seen the cloth, surely he could see it, too. But when he stepped into the room where the two men had set up their looms, the emperor saw nothing on the looms.¹⁶

"This is terrible!" he thought. "I don't see anything at all. What can this mean? If the prime minister saw the cloth, it must be there. Then why can't I see it? Am I stupid? Am I unfit to be emperor? That would be the most dreadful thing that could happen to me."

Alia and the Furniture Troll excerpt "Attention, Furniture World shoppers, there's a troll in the bed department. Leave immediately!" the voice called over the loudspeaker. "Oh, no!" Alia said. She ducked under a table in the bed department. Trog the Troll grabbed Alia's dad, mom, and twin brothers. He lifted them in front of his massive face, blinked his eyes, and transformed them into furniture. Alia's dad and mom became king-sized beds. The twins turned into bunk beds.	Character's Name _____

Day after day, hot lunch kids begged their parents to send them to school with cold lunches. There was no other way to avoid Tracy the lunch troll. If you had cold lunch, you could sit straight at your table without going near her. If you had hot lunch, there was no other choice but to pay the toll. You couldn't pass Tracy until you handed over at least one item off your tray.

One day, a girl named Ashley decided she was going to stand up to Tracy. Ashley had lost pieces of pizza, apples, corn dogs, and even brownies. Brownies! Her class had been learning about the bravery of Rosa Parks. She was feeling inspired that morning.
